To Whom This May Concern:

One of the most moving aspects of live theatre is that it's capable of taking an audience backward and forward in time. Action Racket Theatre's production of Tailored Tales—Something to Suit Everybody... a radio play, accomplished that many times over. The play was recently performed at the 6th Street Avenue B Garden. During the course of an hour, Lois Kagan Mingus and Joanie Fritz Zosike took the audience on a journey that began in the Roaring Twenties and wrapped up in the present moment.

Tailored Tales appeals to audiences of all ages, reflected by the way spectators danced and sang along, laughed, applauded, responding as if we were all truly in a radio studio, energized by the experience of being part of the live production! So much for virtual reality.

While enjoying the performance, we learn about radio's history, as well as the icons, singers, comics, politicians and characters on the world stage that contributed to its long and varied past, present and future.

Lois and Joanie chronicle this story with the ability to wrap themselves in each decade, delivering a highly entertaining and informative piece of theatre. I highly recommend this production. It's an exhilarating trip!
